“ It was 1953 and George Humfleet opened his garage/junk yard/ service station in North London. I lived near by and started hanging out around the business. George gave me a job. I think that I was making 50 cents per day. By 1954 I was running errands and driving cars and trucks even though it would be 2 years before I could qualify for a drivers license. I would go with him to used car auctions and drive the car that he purchased back to the garage. I drove a truck to Corbin and returned with the brick that was used to build his house. There were many more memories that I could on and on about. I am now a retired real estate broker and I live in Virginia near Washington D C. Ernie. Miller.
